Both public and private colleges can offer prestige and opportunities, and both vary in size. Because public colleges receive much of their funding from state and local government, they may be less expensive, particularly for in-state residents. However, both public and private colleges also offer financial assistance from various sources.

The number of undergraduates enrolled at a college can have a big impact on your overall experience. It affects almost every aspect, from the range of majors available to the amount of personal attention you receive. You can choose more than one size.

- Small (fewer than 2,000 students)
- Medium (2,000 - 15,000 students)
- Large (more than 15,000 students)

Where do you picture yourself? Are you drawn to the big city, to wilderness, or to a little of each? Keep in mind that this is the college's environment, and not necessarily a description of the campus itself. You can choose more than one setting.

- Urban setting
- Suburban setting
- Rural setting

Do you want to be close to home? Far from home? Near a certain city or other location? If it's important to you, enter how many miles you want to be from a particular U.S. zip code.

List the states you would want to live in:

Select any activities that are important to you. You can choose more than one activity, but a college will have to offer all that you select in order to match.
